

Psi U tries booze-free week

By ELISE MILLER

Inaugurating a weeklong non-alcoholic program, ten of the 26 active summer members of Psi Upsilon fraternity are participating in the two-day alcohol peer counseling retreat at Moosilauke Ravine Lodge starting today.

The retreat will teach the Psi U members, as well as other members of the Dartmouth community, how to deal with students having alcohol-related problems and "confrontation skills," according to Brook Parker, summer term director of community services for Psi U.

Plans for the non-alcoholic week will continue Saturday night with a non-alcoholic party, sponsored by Psi U and Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority. All the other social organizations on campus agreed not to give parties Saturday night to focus campus-wide attention on the non-use of alcohol, according to Bill Tyree, summer term co-social chairman for Psi U.

Activities for the rest of the week include setting up a volleyball net for games and having more barbeques without alcohol for the brothers, Parker said.

"We have no strict rules for this week, but everyone is really supportive. The ten guys who are going on the retreat agreed not to drink for the entire week, but it is up to the others to decide for themselves," Tyree said.

"I guess the main thing is that Psi U will not be a source of alcohol for the week," Tyree added.
